CabinetCRUNCHER is an affordable, very flexible, design, plans and project management software application that enables you to design and order custom cabinets and furnishings for residential and commercial applications. CabinetCRUNCHER is not only easy to use, it's extremely flexible! This software allows you to create functional 3D models of your design before you build it, and provides you with a wide variety of cabinet, door, & closet design options! So, you can experiment with many different configurations. Design the cabinet you want with the optional modules included in the program. Use any of the many design techniques including standard tongue & groove, curly hollow, bent grain, beaded grain, half-lap or casings. And you can use any of the many hardware options including built-in sliding, revolving or removable doors, closet racks, adjustable shelves and more. The program is easy to use, the presentation-style user interface allows you to see the cabinet front-to-back, rotate it from any angle, and magnify the cabinet to explore many parts at once! There are no unnecessary menus to select; only the tools you need to create cabinets. Need a standard cabinet size or different parts? Choose from any number of cabinet widths, lengths and depths! You can even create and manage different size components without having to go through repetitive steps! In addition to choosing from numerous designs, you can create your own design! You can view the design at any time, change components, create advanced relationships, and view the design at any angle. You can build more than one design and for any project, select and compare which will be best for your needs. For more information, visit NSMutableArray insertObjectAtIndex: causing ARC to free memory Trying to migrate my old code from the Objective C world to Cocoa and is running into problems I thought I knew ARC had solved. I have a NSMutableArray variable that stores different data. Now sometimes that data array is updated, and I want to insert a new object into that array. I was used to this being straight-forward and easy in objective-C, so I just assumed it would continue to work. I'm getting a EXC_BAD_ACCESS on the line below.
