variety of T-shirts from the designer is selling for $6,200, with the proceeds benefiting the Karl Lagerfeld foundation. The money raised from the tees, called "Dear Karl" and only sold through the Armani Exchange, will support the Lagerfeld foundation's projects in the areas of protection of cultural and natural heritage, sustainable art and science, and the protection of human rights. "The collection was inspired by Mr. Lagerfeld's beloved and much-loved hometown of Cannes, the Cannes du Sud with its splendid colors," the Armani Exchange said of the collection. "The Lagerfeld T-shirt is suitable for all tastes. Whether minimalist or sophisticated, it is the perfect tee for your wardrobe." A total of 1,500 tees were created for the Lagerfeld collection, which will also benefit the Lagerfeld foundation's joint projects with the Jules Verne Foundation. The foundation supports projects that defend cultural heritage by promoting the protection of cultural and natural heritage sites through the preservation, acquisition and conservation of cultural objects, and the creation of a sustainable economy. In partnership with the Jules Verne Foundation, the foundation supports sustainable art and science, focusing on research and experimentation to enable the production of the finest art and science.

The immunity-linked immuno-diffusion test was made in patients suffering from chronic obstructive airway diseases, atopic and non-atopic pneumopathies. Sera reactivity with every kind of microbes was found in broncho-alveolar lavage (BAL) and sputum, independent of the character of the inflammatory pattern. A correlation between the grade of inflammation and the antistreptolysin O (ASO) level in BAL was found, but not in sputum. ASO was found to persist in the blood of patients in spite of its clear decrease in BAL. The results of this test are indicative of the effect of microorganisms in bronchopulmonary diseases.I teach German to college students, and we recently did a review of the different verb forms in German: infinitive, present, past, perfect, imperfect, and pluperfect. One of my students was struck, specifically, by the differences between the forms and how each conveys different information. Although this isn't a grammatical question, I thought I'd ask on this site because it's sort of related. This is about the sentence that can be used to ask about a noun: "Was ist das?" Or, in English: "What is it?" This sentence clearly conveys a single, simple concept — the noun — but the way that this is conveyed in the various grammatical tenses has been a topic of study for linguists for generations. My students asked me if "wie" can always be used in this sentence, as in: "Was ist das wie?" That's a simple yes-or-no question, but I got to thinking that it's far from simple. A few years ago, I taught a beginner's German course at a private college. We used a revised, shorter version of the German for Beginners textbook, which had a good explanation of the various verb forms, in the back. The German verb tense section was a bit more challenging than the English, and one of the bigger questions in the book was whether all 1cdb36666d esophageal varices is technically difficult and is accompanied by complications and high mortality. The purpose of this study was to analyze the safety and efficacy of a modified minimally invasive laparoscopic technique for treatment of ruptured esophageal varices. This is a prospective study. A total of 89 patients with ruptured esophageal varices were treated with endoscopic variceal obturation using Gelfoam (Tyco, United States) and/or N-butyl-2-cyanoacrylate (NBCA; Dermik, France) from 2002 to 2002 and from 2007 to 2009 in our center. In our modified technique, the patients were positioned supine with two laparoscopic ports (12 mm and 5 mm) in the right and left flank and another 5 mm trocar in the left flank for laparoscopic balloon. Vein-ligating sutures were used in two or three layers through the left flank port, over the variceal column and positioned around the sub-diaphragmatic, gastrophrenic and gastro-hepatic ligament. A balloon catheter was inserted through the left flank port and inflated in the gastrophrenic ligament. Accurate placement was confirmed by fluoroscopy. ET was applied in 46 patients (50%) and sclerotherapy in 43 patients (50%). The mean follow-up was 17.2 months. The mean age was 52.7 years

(range, 28-68 years). There was no operative mortality. The technical success rate was 95.6% (87/91). Three of the 89 patients (3.4%) were lost to follow-up. Other complications included two patients with chylothorax and two patients with stricture; these resolved with conservative management. Two patients underwent re-laparoscopy because of gastro-esophageal bleeding, but there was no mortality. A modified laparoscopic technique for treatment of ruptured esophageal varices was safe and effective. This technique provided significant benefit by decreasing the complications and mortality associated with ET.Q
